- Authority to build and own a 40-megawatt natural-gas facility near its existing La Luz Energy Center, which it says would provide backup power and help maintain reliability when renewable resources are unavailable.
- Authority to stop using its generation interest in the coal-fired Four Corners Power Plant beginning in 2031 as part of its transition toward lower-carbon energy resources.
- Authority to defer certain costs associated with resources that may be needed to serve future large economic-development projects, allowing those costs to be addressed in future ratemaking proceedings.

PNM states that these requests are part of its broader plan to maintain reliability, accommodate expected growth in electricity demand, and continue its transition toward carbon-free energy resources.
